Introduction to the Guide

This guide has been created to provide a quick reference to the records series held in The United Church of Canada Archives (Toronto) that are relevant to research on the Angola Missions.

The administrative background of The United Church of Canada is briefly outlined in this guide to provide the researcher with some understanding of where work related to Angola was situated within the organizational structures over time.

The Fonds have been roughly grouped to show records prior to Church Union in 1925 and afterwards when The United Church of Canada was formed. Of course records in all fonds may extend earlier and later than these date periods –detailed finding aids are available to assist the researcher in identifying which fonds will contain useful records.

A sizeable amount of audio-visual records produced by Berkeley Studio are stored offsite. Please contact the archives prior to your visit to determine if you need to order materials in advance: archives@united-church.ca

Overview of United Church involvement in Angola

The Canadian Congregational Foreign Mission Society was organized in 1881 by the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec. Its objective was to spread knowledge of the Gospel and was operated in cooperation with the American Congregational Foreign Mission Society in Africa. Rev. Walter T. Currie and his wife were sent to Angola in 1885 to work under the mission begun by the American Board. The Congregational Woman's Board of Missions was Founded 1886 in connection with the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec, sending its first woman missionary to Angola in 1890.

The Society was absorbed into the United Church of Canada Foreign Mission activities in 1925 –at that time the three stations included 24 missionaries and about 150 outstations, one hospital, several boarding schools and one central training institute in Dondi.

The Canadian Missionaries operated largely in Chisamba, Camundongo and Dondi.

After the negotiations between the United Church and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational) after 1925, the work was divided. The Angola West Africa Mission of the United Church with its Mission Council [of missionaries] which included participation by the Woman's Missionary Society. The American mission was referred to as the West Central Africa Mission, and later as the Angola Mission. Representatives of both of the above Missions met as the Board of Trustees with some African representation to deal with matters concerning the central institutions at Dondi; they also met annually in joint meetings of the Angola West Africa Mission and the West Central Africa Mission until 1952.

Beginning in 1953, these joint meetings included the Church Council of the Church of Christ in Angola. These meetings were replaced, between 1956 and 1957, by the Council of the Evangelical Church in Central Africa which merged the church and missions, effectively extending control of the work to the indigenous Angolan Church.

CANADA CONGREGATIONAL WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS FONDS. -- 1888-1946, predominant 1888-1926. --33 cm of textual records

Founded 1886 in connection with the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec, the Board soon directed its attention to the foreign field, sending its first woman missionary to Angola in 1890. Although foreign mission work continued to claim the greater part of the Board's resources, it also supported numerous home mission undertakings (collecting donations for needy Aboriginal People and settlers on the prairies; welcoming immigrants; assisting new Canadians in building churches), and contributed generously to the home mission schemes of the Canada Congregational Missionary Society. The Board's main activities included fund raising, missionary education, and supplying woman missionaries for work abroad.

UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY FONDS. -- 1886-1972, predominant 1925-1962. -- 35 m of textual records; photographs

The United Church of Canada Woman's Missionary Society (WMS) brought together in October 1925 the Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church (Canada) and the Canada Congregational Woman's Board of Missions. The new Society had its first annual meeting in 1926. Like the earlier societies, it brought the message of missions before the entire community of the Church, while offering financial support and personnel to its own wide mission programme. The Home and Overseas Missions were organized into separate Departments, and other Departments were devoted to Finance, Home Organization, Literature, Periodicals, and Scholarship and Candidates.

The foreign missions were under an Executive Secretary of the Foreign Mission Department (renamed Overseas Missions in 1945), with secretaries responsible for each foreign nation in which the Society served. The women's work encompassed the whole of the modern century's missionary ideal: medical service, including clinics and nursing, but also hospital building, financing and administration; education from the primary to the university level; evangelism, visitation and social service. By the 1950s, control of many of these mission enterprises had been transferred to local leadership. The Society worked in cooperation with the United Church's Board of Overseas Missions in many of these missions.

The home missions were under an Executive Secretary of the Home Missions Department. The Department worked with immigrants and the poor, on Aboriginal reserves where they operated hospitals and schools, and in cities where they ran boarding schools and homes for out-of-town children. The Society originally established a number of schools and hospitals, predominantly in Western Canada, but these were gradually turned over to government administration.

In 1962 the Society's overseas missions work was merged with the new Board of World Mission; the home missions work was merged with the Board of Home Missions. Other work was incorporated into the Board of Women, established in 1962, and into the general work of United Church Boards in which women were achieving more equal participation.

RECORDS RELATING TO ANGOLA. -- 1924-1961. -- 48 cm of textual records

The Angola Mission was originally a Congregational mission and the first woman from the Congregational Women's Board of Missions began her service there in 1890. After Church Union, the Woman's Missionary Society was one of three overseas missions boards working in Angola. The United Church Board of Overseas Missions and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational) were the other two. Throughout this period the Church of Christ in Angola gradually took over more and more responsibility for the direction of the work done by the foreign boards.
